

Will You Join Me in the Great Adventure?

It is only a short time from now

That I must leave my body and earthly ties,

Forget that I ever visited the world

And disappear in the thin mists of eternity.

While the journey on earth

Was both a wild adventure

As well as an empty exercise –

It was actually an endless mourning.

Humans live by strange values and rules,

Obvious truths are subjected to endless logical testing,

Turning our values into a commodity,

Our experience a mindless exercise.

So much weight is put on intelligence,

So much value given to material wealth,

When man lives for only a short while,

Isn't this a reckless failure of our commonsense?.

But I am here now

At the point of departure from the world,

Will you hold my hand till the last moment

And join me in the great adventure ahead?
